CARPET STORY

DESIGN & COLOURS

Before weaving a carpet, designers create a graph for a design that follows the market’s trend. This hand drawn plan sits behind the loom to guide weavers through the design. It specifies the design colour and position of every knot.

DYEING

To keep the traditions alive and colors natural and close to perfection, the vegetable dyeing is used in addition to the modern techniques including acid and vat dyeing. The yarns are dyed and then left to dry naturally in the sun on the buildings’ rooftops.

WEAVING

Knotting carpets is a craftsmanship that requires skills and experience, where each weaver knots row after row following the graphical designs/ patterns to finally produce a speaking piece of art.

WASHING

The rugs are thoroughly washed on both sides; water is squeezed through the pile with wooden paddles and left to dry naturally in the sun.

CUTTING & CLIPPING

Once dry, the rug is laid flat and the pile cut neatly to the required height by hand.

Clipping is another part of the finishing process; boundaries between different colours and pattern elements are carefully defined and differences in pile heights are smoothed.

The final stage involves neatly wrapping the sides of the rug in a yarn that matches the design.

WOOL

Wool is warmer in the winter and cooler in the summer. Wool naturally feels better, is more resilient, and helps moderate temperature and humidity in the home by absorbing and releasing moisture as needed.

HAND-KNOTTED

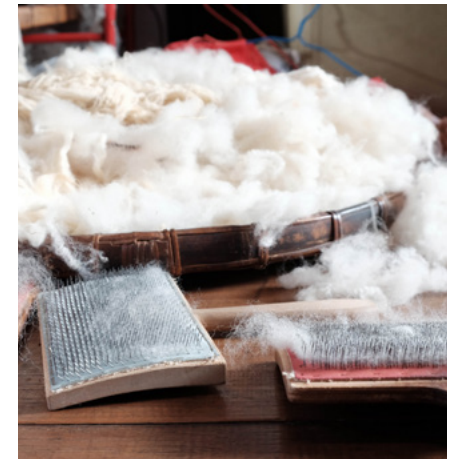

In a technique that has been handed down from generation to generation, yarn is wrapped and then knotted around each warp thread. Each yarn is then hand-cut and hand-tamped to form tightly constructed knotted carpet rugs. This time and attention to detail by expert craftsmen results in a beautiful rug with a lasting value and presence.

HAND-TUFTED

With the aid of a tufting tool, yarn is passed through a frame-stretched fabric backing on which a pattern has been drawn. Both cut or looped piles are achieved through this process. The tufted pile rug is backed with latex for stability, then with fabric for a finished look.

HAND-LOOMED

A variety of looks and textures from luxurious shag rugs to versatile cotton rag rugs are achieved with the use of a loom. A combination of colors and yarn thicknesses is intricately hand-woven to create contemporary or traditional designs.

SILK

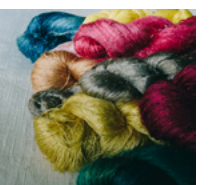

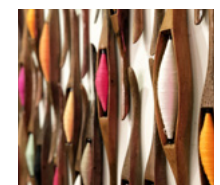

Silk is a natural lustrous fibre that has a high tensile strength. The fibre is so lustrous that weavers at times exploit the play of light in their patterns. Silk makes wonderful oriental carpets or rugs. It is also used as pattern highlights in woollen carpets. These carpets are rich and are usually made on the cotton foundation but some may even have silk foundation. Silk carpets or rugs are highly preferred in soft, even and dry areas owing to the delicacy of the fibre. Also, silk carpets require a high maintenance as compared to that of wool carpets.

Real Silk

Real silk is produced from the cocoon covering of the silkworm, the pupal form of the Asian or mulberry silk moth, bombyx mori. The cocoon is spun by the silk moth caterpillar of a single silk fiber that can be up to several thousand ' in length. To harvest the silk, completed cocoons are boiled or heated, then laboriously unwound into single fibers which are plied together and spun into thread or silk yarn.

Artsilk

Artificial silk is everything that looks and feels like silk that doesn't come from the silkworm cocoon. Most often this means mercerized cotton; sometimes it means a manufactured fiber like rayon or a blend of chemically altered and/or manufactured fibers. It's not that artsilk would lessen the overall quality, it's just that the whole point of using artificial silk in a rug is to save the cost of real silk.
